QUARTERLY REPORT

December 31, 2018

Market Report

After strong performance during the first three quarters, the US stock market turned ugly in early October and experienced several significant ups and downs during the quarter. Unfortunately, the downs were more pronounced than the ups. The year closed with the worst common stock performance since 2008, with the Russell 3000 index being down -14% for the quarter and down -5.2% for the year.

Stocks across the board—large capitalization stocks, small cap stocks, the growth style and the value style—sustained losses for the quarter and the year. International stocks outperformed the US for the quarter, but not for the year.

The bond market improved slightly during the fourth quarter, providing modest total returns. This occurred even though the Federal Reserve continued to increase short term interest rates and continued to sell US Treasury Bonds it acquired during the Great Recession. Cash was the best performing asset class for the year.

Model Portfolio Review

The three Foundation model portfolios containing stocks sustained losses for the quarter and the year. The Capital Maintenance model achieved modest gains. Performance relative to peer groups for all models was mixed for the quarter and favorable for the year. Longer-term relative performance for all models is favorable compared to other managers.

On a consolidated basis, the Foundation outperformed its peer group and its benchmark for the quarter and the year even though losses were experienced for both time periods.
